Psychology, as a branch of science, devises effective solutions to our needs in work and life. In recent years, psychological principles and theories have been widely applied to solve real-world problems in various fields, ranging from industry, engineering, organizational management, market consumption, school education, social life, health care, sports, military, judicial to environmental protection.

Many high-quality articles on clinical psychology, especially psychological evaluation and therapies, have been published in many reputed journals. This guest issue aims to bring together academicians, researchers and students from institutes and universities across the world, allowing them to discuss and share their innovative thoughts in the field of psychology.

We had a long conversation with journal Revista Argentina De Clinica Psicologica, ensuring that all the papers selected for this issue demonstrate the latest research results in China. This journal is arguably the best platform to share the current research among Chinese scholars engaging in psychology and its related subjects.

In response to the call for papers, we are glad to see a variety of well-written articles submitted by researchers from different provinces of China. These articles focus on a dazzlingly array of research fields related to psychology, namely, educational psychology, counselling psychology, management psychology, consumer psychology, legal psychology, sports psychology, engineering psychology, industrial and organizational psychology, and rehabilitation psychology. Each article was subjected to a blind review by experts on the related field. After the review, the most inspiring articles were accepted for publication.

We must express sincere thanks to Revista Argentina De Clinica Psicologica for accepting us as guest editors, and agreeing to publish the selected paper.

As guest editors of these guest issues (1 & 2), we are exceedingly thankful to the authors and reviewers for their meaningful research and valuable comments. On behalf of the authors of the selected papers, we would also thank the various funding agencies of China, who have contributed greatly to the research projects.

We hope readers find these guest issues both interesting and inspiring.
